Windy Northwest weather can ruin your hairstyle. So lock it in by misting all over from 10 inches away with an aerosol hairspray (try Garnier Fructis Style Full Control Hairspray, $4, at drugstores). Seattle hairstylist Alisa Avery says aerosols have a finer mist so they feel less crunchy than pump sprays.

The Northwest can sometimes be dry in the summer, and it's no surprise that this can make your skin dry too. Applying moisturizer helps, but Idaho dermatologist Carl Thornfeldt, M.D., also recommends taking a daily supplement with 1,000 mg of essential fatty acids (flaxseed oil is a good source; try Natrol Flax Seed Oil Softgels, $11, natrol.com). He says the essential fatty acids help keep your skin hydrated even on extra-dry days!

It's hard to apply bronzer correctly when you're using a large brush, so makeup artist Deirdre Quinn suggests using a blush brush instead of a larger powder brush. Just dip the blush brush in a powder bronzer, tap off the excess, then lightly dust the tops of your cheekbones and across your nose too (try Sonia Kashuk Blush Brush, $11, Target, and CoverGirl TruBlend Naturally Luminous Bronzer, both below, $7, at drugstores). Want more color? Dust your forehead and temples lightly too.
